

The water supply in the village of Bhatgaon, West Bengal, was contaminated with arsenic for years. The villagers had to drink toxic water and fill their bottles from a safe community tap.

Online in an Instant With Afro

Read More

It is a common sight in Bhatgaon, a village of 3,000 people in West Bengal, India. A group of people are standing in a line, waiting to fill their bottles from a safe community tap. The water supply in the village was contaminated with arsenic for years. The villagers had to drink toxic water and fill their bottles from a safe community tap.

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More

Read More